

Story Building

The youngest player should pick out four things they can see outside the window.

Once you have the objects, the game can begin. Each player takes it in turns to add to a story that builds a little bit at a time. The first player must include the first of the four objects, the second includes the second thing and this goes on to use all four objects. You could keep adding more groups of four things until you have a never ending story! – or at least, until one of the players gets it wrong! Then, they must drop out of the game.

Here is an example:

Gate; Church; Horse; Cloud.

Once upon a time a beautiful lady walked out of her house, across her garden and through the gate to the lane.

Once upon a time a beautiful lady walked out of her house, across her garden and through the gate to the lane. She went up the lane until she came to a church. Inside the church sat a lonely prince.

Once upon a time a beautiful lady walked out of her house, across her garden and through the gate to the lane. She went up the lane until she came to a church. Inside the church sat a lonely prince dressed all in white.. When the girl walked in, the prince immediately fell in love with her and they were married on the spot

Once upon a time a beautiful lady walked out of her house, across her garden and through the gate to the lane. She went up the lane until she came to a church. Inside the church sat a lonely prince dressed all in white. When the girl walked in, the prince immediately fell in love with her and they were married on the spot. After the wedding they set off for the prince's castle in a wonderful carriage pulled by a proud white horse.

Once upon a time a beautiful lady walked out of her house, across her garden and through the gate to the lane. She went up the lane until she came to a church. Inside the church sat a lonely prince dressed all in white. When the girl walked in, the prince immediately fell in love with her and they were married on the spot. After the wedding they set off for the prince's castle in a wonderful carriage pulled by a proud white horse. As the couple were travelling, the lady was astonished to find that the horse was flying! The prince's castle sat in the sky on a fluffy white cloud.

Now its your turn.